

Medicaid Coverage for Low-Income New Mexicans Faces Many Threats

Medicaid in New Mexico

- covers ~ 900,000 children, adults, individuals with disabilities, and seniors
- brought in $4.3 billion in federal dollars in FY 2016

If Medicaid funding is cut and the expansion rolled back, by 2026:

- 250,000 New Mexicans would lose their health care coverage
- NM would lose $11 billion in federal funding
- NM would lose 32,000 jobs

Federal & State Threats

- Changing to a block grant or imposing per capita caps: Instead of getting a percentage of the state's total Medicaid costs, NM would get a fixed dollar amount for the state or a fixed dollar amount per beneficiary. Both options would drastically reduce the federal funds coming into NM, with no increases for emerging coverage needs, rising health care costs, or aging demographics.
- Removing pre-existing condition protections, excluding services, and adding work requirements: The state could be allowed to make pregnancy a pre-existing condition, for example, to opt out of providing essential health benefits like mental health or prescription drugs to individuals or small group markets, or to add a work requirement and terminate coverage for 'non-compliant' beneficiaries.
- Imposing Medicaid premiums: People and families with any income between the poverty level and the Medicaid eligibility level could be required to pay monthly premiums.
- Eliminating transitional Medicaid: The state could end transitional Medicaid, which extends coverage for four months to people whose earnings have increased in the event that the income increase makes them ineligible for Medicaid but is not enough to cover the cost of private health insurance. The loss of public benefits to a wage increase that does not cover the cost of the loss is known as the cliff effect.

Impacts on New Mexico

-  Fewer people insured
-  Less access to services
-  Prohibitive cost-sharing
-  Higher prescription drug costs
-  Lower provider payments
-  Higher uncompensated care costs
-  Worse provider shortages
-  Worse cliff effect
-  Less state economic activity
-  More pressure on the state budget
